Disruption of IR50 causes a meiotic defect \[[@B26]\]. The hypothesis that ATM serves as a mediator for IR50 signaling, and that IR50 interacts with the checkpoint protein kinase SOG1, provides a logical link between DNA damage sensing and the initiation of the meiotic program \[[@B28]\]. The initial report of ATM and IR50 suggested that the two proteins could be considered an in vivo complex \[[@B24]\]. More recent experiments have shown, however, that the two proteins form separate complexes within the cell, and their roles in DNA damage signaling may be distinct \[[@B28]\]. IR50 is recruited to DSBs by a complex with the proteins Cdc9 and Sae3, whereas ATM is recruited to DSBs via Mre11-Rad50-Xrs2 \[[@B29]\]. IR50 and ATM also play distinct roles in the regulation of DNA damage checkpoints. The IR50^A^−A^ mutation causes a defect in the G2 DNA damage checkpoint, but the G1 checkpoint appears unaffected \[[@B28]\]. This is consistent with the fact that the IR50 kinase is not thought to have a role in G1/S progression \[[@B26],[@B30]\]. Conversely, ATM is known to have a role in the regulation of the G1/S transition \[[@B31]\]. The IR50 gene is transcribed from a single-copy gene on chromosome 12, and the IR50 transcript is unstable \[[@B32]\]. IR50 protein levels are regulated by the NMD pathway, which is required for the degradation of the IR50 transcript \[[@B32]\]. IR50^A^−A^ mutants accumulate a stable truncated form of the IR50 transcript. IR50 protein levels are also regulated by its own RNA and proteasome-dependent degradation, and IR50 also has an autoregulatory function \[[@B28]\]. Thus, IR50 levels 82157476af
